It was an opportunity for so left to note what kind of music conquered the haut monde of Parls more than a century ago, when it was the subject of aerimonious dispute and called forth words as bitter as those evoked by the advent of the Wagnerian music drama in the middle of the ninetenth century.

Doubless a hearing of its deeply felt but always suave melodies must have aroused wonder that such music could ever have conduced to anything but peace. But possibly if to-morrow evening the same audience could hear an opera by Gluck's great antagonist, Piccini, the understanding of the situation would be made clear. On the other.

WORK OF DEFECTIVES PUT ON SALE TO-DAY

How Mrs. Shepard Morgan Brought City Around Through Auction.

There are many ways of getting around the law, but it was left for Mrs. Shepard Morgan's sub-committee of the New York City Visiting Committee to resort to a public auction to get posses sion of some goods they wanted to seize and couldn't. The goods were decorated jars and baskets and stencilled tinware and couldn't. and rugs and toys and so on, made by the defective children on Randall's Island. Mrs. Morgan's committee has been coveting those articles for a long time so the defective children could be encouraged and made to feel that they were some use in the world and the city's coffers enriched by the proceeds.

But stern visaged law steod in the way of their plans, avowing that Father Knickerbocker would not permit the handlwork of his charges to be sold ex-cept at public auction. For fifty years the children on Randall's Island have been making things as a part of their education, taught by teachers provided by the city and using material furnished by the city. It remained for Mrs. Mor-we'll bid in the lot," she said. It was done. The auction, was advertised in the City Record, as is required. As no other bidders appeared the lot was knocked down to Mrs. Morgan's representative.

To-day at the home of Mrs. Helen Hartley Jenkins, 232 Madison avenue, the lot will be offered to the public, but each article listed separately.
